Miller said being selected for the program “means that others recognize that my experience and business judgment — including as a woman and an attorney, in the C-suite and boardroom for, and at the negotiation table on behalf of, a Fortune 500 company — can benefit other companies, their boards, and their shareholders.”

“It means I will be able to refine the knowledge and skills I have already developed by engaging with other women lawyers from across the country who are my classmates and also the faculty, alumnae, and honorees of the program,” she said. MORE
